Military Chaplaincy

One of the ways ordained clergy serve God through the church is through ministries of "witness and service which extend Christ's love and justice" (§343.1 of The Book of Discipline of The United Methodist Church), including military chaplaincy.

In Iowa for example, Steve Peters, the pastor of Trinity United Methodist Church in Fort Dodge, was deployed in June to serve as a chaplain for six months at Dover Air Force Base. Because persons serving in these unique settings are expected to have specialized training, he has studied to receive a chaplaincy endorsement.

War is inimical to the teachings of Jesus, but the role of a military chaplain is not to justify war. A chaplain's task is to minister to the emotional and spiritual needs of service members in war and in peace. The chaplain serves units that not only prepare for war but a number of other deployments as well. The military services are involved in peacemaking, peacekeeping, and humanitarian operations both domestic and international.

Clergy in specialized pastoral care ministries such as chaplains may be endorsed by the United Methodist Endorsing Agency, which is made possible by General Church appropriation gifts from local churches. Learn more at www.qbhem.org.
